When people go to the clinic, store, supermarket, or any other place, they feel that it is really problematic. So you have to face the problem complications in this world. We certainly will not be one who causes the problem to others, but we will certainly try to solve the problem. In this book, you can find a wide range of solutions to the problems you face in your daily life. Whether it is in the workplace, school, or any other area, this book will provide you with the knowledge and skills you need to overcome the challenges you face. So, let's find out what you can do about it and find a solution to your problem.
to better understanding of both the technologies and the settings. Enhanced by cross-cultural perspectives, the book addresses the challenges that globalization presents to local understandings of science, technology, and ambition.

The Global Silicon Valley Home
Shenglin Chang 2006

The Global Silicon Valley Home takes a close look at how residents (Taiwanese American high-tech trans-Pacific commuter culture have invented new ways of thinking about how their homes and landscapes reflect their personal identities—ways that enable them to make sense of “living life within two places at once.”

Return to Sender
Karsten Paerregaard 2015

Return to Sender is an anthropological account of how Peruvian emigrants raise and remit money and what that activity means for themselves and for their home communities. The book draws on first-hand ethnographic data from North and South America, Europe, and Japan to describe how Peruvians remit to relatives at home, collectively raise money to organize development projects in their regions of origin, and invest savings in business and other activities. Return to Sender challenges unqualified approval of remittances as beneficial resources of development for home communities and important income for home countries. It finds a more complex situation in which remittances can also create dependency and deprivation.

Mobile Selves
Ulla D. Berg 2017

The management and labor culture of the entertainment industry. An explanation of how Peruvian migrants maintain meaningful social relations across borders. In this engaging volume, Ulla D. Berg examines the conditions under which Peruvians of rural and working-class origins leave the central highlands to migrate to the United States. Migrants often create new portrayals of themselves to overcome the class and racial biases that they had faced in their home country, as well as to control the images that others share of themselves with others back home. Migrant videos, for example, which document migrants' lives back at their family's home, are often sanitized to avoid causing worry. By exploring the ways in which migration is mediated by technologies of visual and verbal images, Berg makes a major contribution to understanding the role of technology in fostering new forms of migrant sociality and subjectivity. It focuses on the forms of sociality and belonging that these mediations enable, adding to important anthropological debates about affect, subjectivity, and sociality in today's mobile world. It also makes significant contributions to studies of inequality in Latin America, showcasing the intersection of transnational mobility with structures and processes of exclusion in both national and global contexts. A key resource for understanding the experiences of transnational and indigenous populations, Mobile Selves demonstrates the critical role that ethnography can play in transcultural migration studies and exemplifies what comparative migration studies stand to gain from anthropological analysis and ethnographic methodologies.